FORD WINS LIBEL SUIT

CASE THAT COST MILLION.

Magnate Awarded Nominal Damages Because Chicago Tribune Calle Him an Anarchist.

At 8:15 o'clock at night the jury, which for three months has been Plans for the selzing of all hoards hearing testimony and arguments in the suit, returned a decision in favor of the auto manufacturer, who sought vindication in the courts of the charge

> Trial of the suit, which, it is estimated, cost a million, was featured by the testimony of Mr. Ford, his son, Edsel, owners and editors of the Tribune and notable educators and clergymen.

The jury awarded Mr. Ford damages of 6 cents, thus following the precedent of the famous Roosevelt damage suit jury of some years ago in awarding a moral victory.

The jury had been deliberating since 9:55 o'clock in the morning. Judge Tucker, instructing the jury stated "the right of fair comment" is expected in the case of Mr. Ford, because his position as a great employer of labor and entry as a propagandist into the discussion of the preparedness question made him a publie character.

The judge held that a newspaper has no greater privilege in making comment than bas an individual,

The jury was instructed further to dismiss the case against the Solomon News company, which on a purely technical charge that it distributed n Michigan 208 copies of the Tribune Issue of June 23, 1916, containing the alleged libelous editorial headed Ford Is an Anarchist," was made a o-defendant.

The judge instructed that plaintiff's charges of pro-Germanism against the Tribune and of a selfish interest in advocating intervention in Mexico had not been proved and the jury need not consider it.

THE TWO HORSES.

"Listen horses," said Jenny Horse, "Jerry and I have been quite famous." The horses were in a stable and they were neighing and chatting.

"Yes," said Jerry Horse, "we have, but It was very, very foolish." "Dear me," said another horse, "you two horses are a great addition to the stable. To think that you have both been famous and that you consider fame a foolish thing.

"One would think that to be famous would be everything in the world, like being in history for example, like being a George Washington or some great creature."

"There, there," said one of the horses, "that is going rather far. You begin to imagine things and then you imagine more and more. One day you were making-believe so hard that you almost believed yourself you had been the horse who had been ridden by Paul Revere."

"That's so," said the horse who had been speaking. "Well, fame always seems very wonderful to me."

"You have been famous for having been always in the one stable. That is quite unusual in these days of seiling horses and buying motor cars," said another horse.

"True," said the horse who thought fame was so fine.

There were many horses in the stable for the master loved horses and so did the mistress, and so did the children. They wouldn't have given up their horses for anything, as they enjoyed riding and driving.

"What were you going to tell us?" one of the horses asked Jenny Horse. She was the new white horse who had just arrived.

"Oh yes, I was going to tell you how famous Jerry and I have been."

"I'm Jerry," neighed the other new white horse. "Tell us," neighed the horses.

"Tell us," they urged. "You tell the story," said Jerry, nodding his head at Jenny. "No, you would tell it far better," sald Jenny.

"Ah no, that is modest of you but it is not so, you would tell it better."

"Pray tell it." the other horses urged. "Well," said Jenny, "Jerry and I ere two horses who were once in an opera. Now an opera is a great musical play. There is a huge orchestra or big band or whatever you want to call it. Then there are singers and before them are lots and lots of people who clap their hands and who seem to enjoy it very much."

"They say," said Jerry, "that it costs lots of money to go to operas." "Now Jerry," said Jenny, "don't be snobbish!" "Well, I wasn't snobbish, I was only telling that as a matter of interest." "We were in the opera," continued Jenny. "There have been horses who have appeared in other operas and also plays from time to time, but we are two horses you actually see and know who have been in a great, great Italian opera called Aida,"

"Did you sing?" asked the other horses. "Oh, gracious no," said Jerry, "we weren't asked to sing, and our volces weren't even tried." 'We were dressed up with bells and a handsome harness," said Jenny, "and we brought in a fine wooden cart. Oh, the stage had every color on it imaginable! It was a glorious scene.

"And I nudged Jerry, and shook my head at him and said:

"'Aren't we a pair of pretty smart horses to be in a great opera like this?" "'Why yes,' Jerry answered, 'but we don't understand the beauties of music like the Joy of enting hay."

"'Hush,' I said to Jerry, 'let no one hear you say such a thing at the opera.' Isn't that a fine story?"
